

The Trump Question

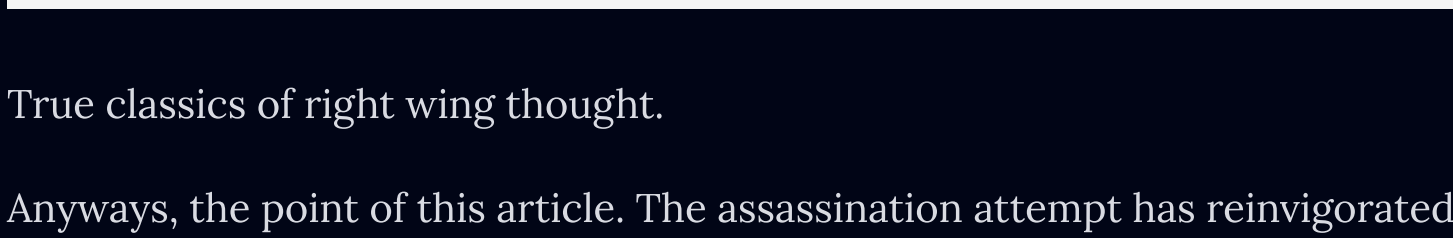

Is a Trump victory good or bad for the pro-White bloc?

A lot has happened over the last week, since some dysgenic freak took some shots at lucky number 45. Seems the gods favored Trump in this instance, as his death was narrowly avoided by a last minute turn of his head. The event opened the floodgates of political discourse, and it has undoubtedly changed the politics of America forever. On one hand, the Left showed their true nature. Obviously, our circle already knew this. But many of the average Conservatives truly clung to the belief that civil discourse was real & that they weren't hated like the plague. We also saw that the Left was just as prone to conspiratorial thinking as we make fun of the Right for being.

On the other side of the coin, Conservatives are gradually losing their inhibitions & taking effective action against their enemies. Getting people fired & generally using the cancel culture stuff against their adversaries. Hopefully this signals the death of the "Wow imagine if the situation was reversed" era of center right politics.

True classics of right wing thought.

Anyways, the point of this article. The assassination attempt has reinvigorated the Trump campaign like a throwing a match into an oil barrel. I've previously noted how Trump '24 doesn't have nearly as much momentum as Trump '16 & '20, at least before now. I'll admit, it's fun to see. Both the previous election seasons were pretty important times in my life intellectually, they were also both golden eras on iFunny. One of my all time favorite YouTube videos is that compilation of everyone saying Trump would never be president, turning into the reactions on election night of Clinton supporters crying & news anchors sitting in shock at how wrong the polls were. I still listen to Never Come Down by Brave Shores every now & then to remind of those days.

People on the edges of the Right (anyone further than Tucker Carlson) gradually lost faith in Trump from 2017 to 2019. Society's ills didn't get better, mainstream Conservatism got worse, & Trump generally was far too soft on the System. Some of this was rightful, Trump definitely made some poor choices in his term, which is inherited from general Conservative attitudes of believing that bipartisanship is still a thing. A lot of it was also kind of retarded, a lot of the AltRight types, for some reason, had this idea that Trump would be the 2nd Hitler & enact TND immediately. Obviously this was idiotic, no one who's decidedly pro-White will ever gain a foothold in a System that has the express purpose of being anti-White.

Regardless, the 2020 election rather suddenly regained the momentum of '16. It kind of came out of nowhere, at least from my perspective. I vividly remember a gif caption (I think it was from Zaoist, could be wrong) of Thanos grabbing the glove thing with the caption "Me putting on my MAGA hat for the first time since 2016". Profile icons were edited with MAGA hats, all the good stuff. We all know what happened in the election, and the subsequent reaction to it. As an Accorcionista, it was the greatest thing I've ever seen. Literally ten of millions of people instantly became anti-System. The Trump train would continue riding hard until the 16 riot, as Trump dramatically toned down rhetoric & took a more moderate approach. Whether or not this was the right call is for you to decide. Personally, I wish he would have crossed the Rubicon because it would have been extremely cool & funny.

Trump's main voting base would more or less hold strong, especially in reaction to the misdeeds of the Biden administration, but there really wasn't much momentum or high spirits until now. I don't think a lot of it was based on a blackpill of the election being rigged either way, just a general lack of enthusiasm. Now that the Trump train is back on track, there's been 2 very different reactions from the hard Right. Many are joining & supporting Trump while others are saying that falling back into the trap of the System Right is counterintuitive. A lot of my friends on iFunny are arguing about this like Archeofuturism, Wignasty, Bloodtheism, and a host of others. The situation is similar on Telegram.

The 3 major views I've seen are such:

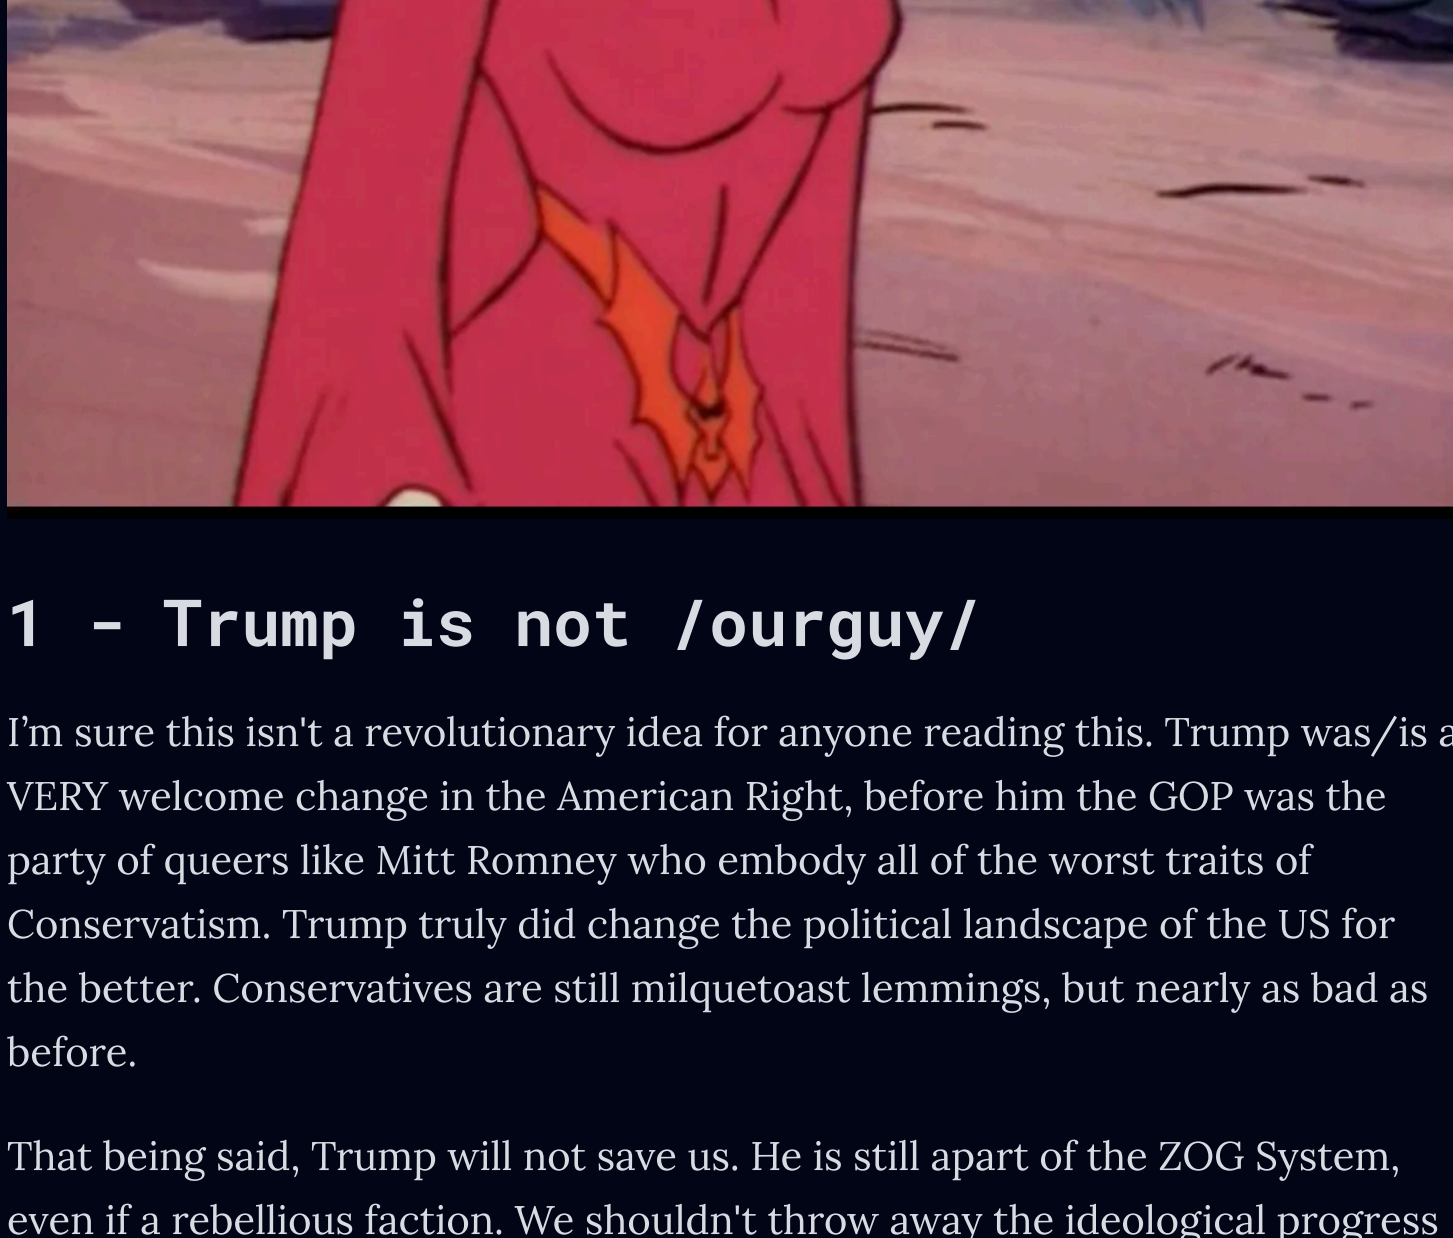

1 - We should support Trump to preserve basic things like slowing immigration, preserving gun rights, & keeping the overton window as far right as possible.

2 - We shouldn't support anyone & openly treat the entire System as the enemy, including Falconcons & Trump himself due to his participation in the game of pandering to everyone except Whites.

3 - We should hope for a Trump defeat to make the situation worse & accelerate the Collapse.

All of these views have merit & are based in reality. They're all ideologically sound. That being said, going to far into any of them presents psychological traps that we should be wary of.

1 - Trump is not /ourguy/

I'm sure this isn't a revolutionary idea for anyone reading this. Trump was/is a VERY welcome change in the American Right, before him the GOP was the party of queers like Mitt Romney who embody all of the worst traits of Conservatism. Trump truly did change the political landscape of the US for the better. Conservatives are still milquetoast lemmings, but nearly as bad as before.

That being said, Trump will not save us. He is still apart of the ZOG System, even if a rebellious faction. We shouldn't throw away the ideological progress we've made in the last 10 years for a false sense of hope or security. Trump pushing the Right further is absolutely a good thing, but that's not our overall goal. Not yet. Hopefully whoever succeeds Trump will continue this push but in likelihood it very well might end with him. Be prepared for this.

The Trump campaign is currently pushing mass deportation & essentially cutting immigration in half. If he enacts some of the policies put forth by the White Papers Policy Institute (highly recommend their substack btw) he could easily cut & even reverse the effects of migration heavily without too much risk. This is a good thing. Putting aside my ideological zealotry, we must think of what's best for the preservation of the White race. We still need to awaken racial consciousness & we need to buy time to do that. This will be an absolute prerequisite for any NS or otherwise pro-White revolution.

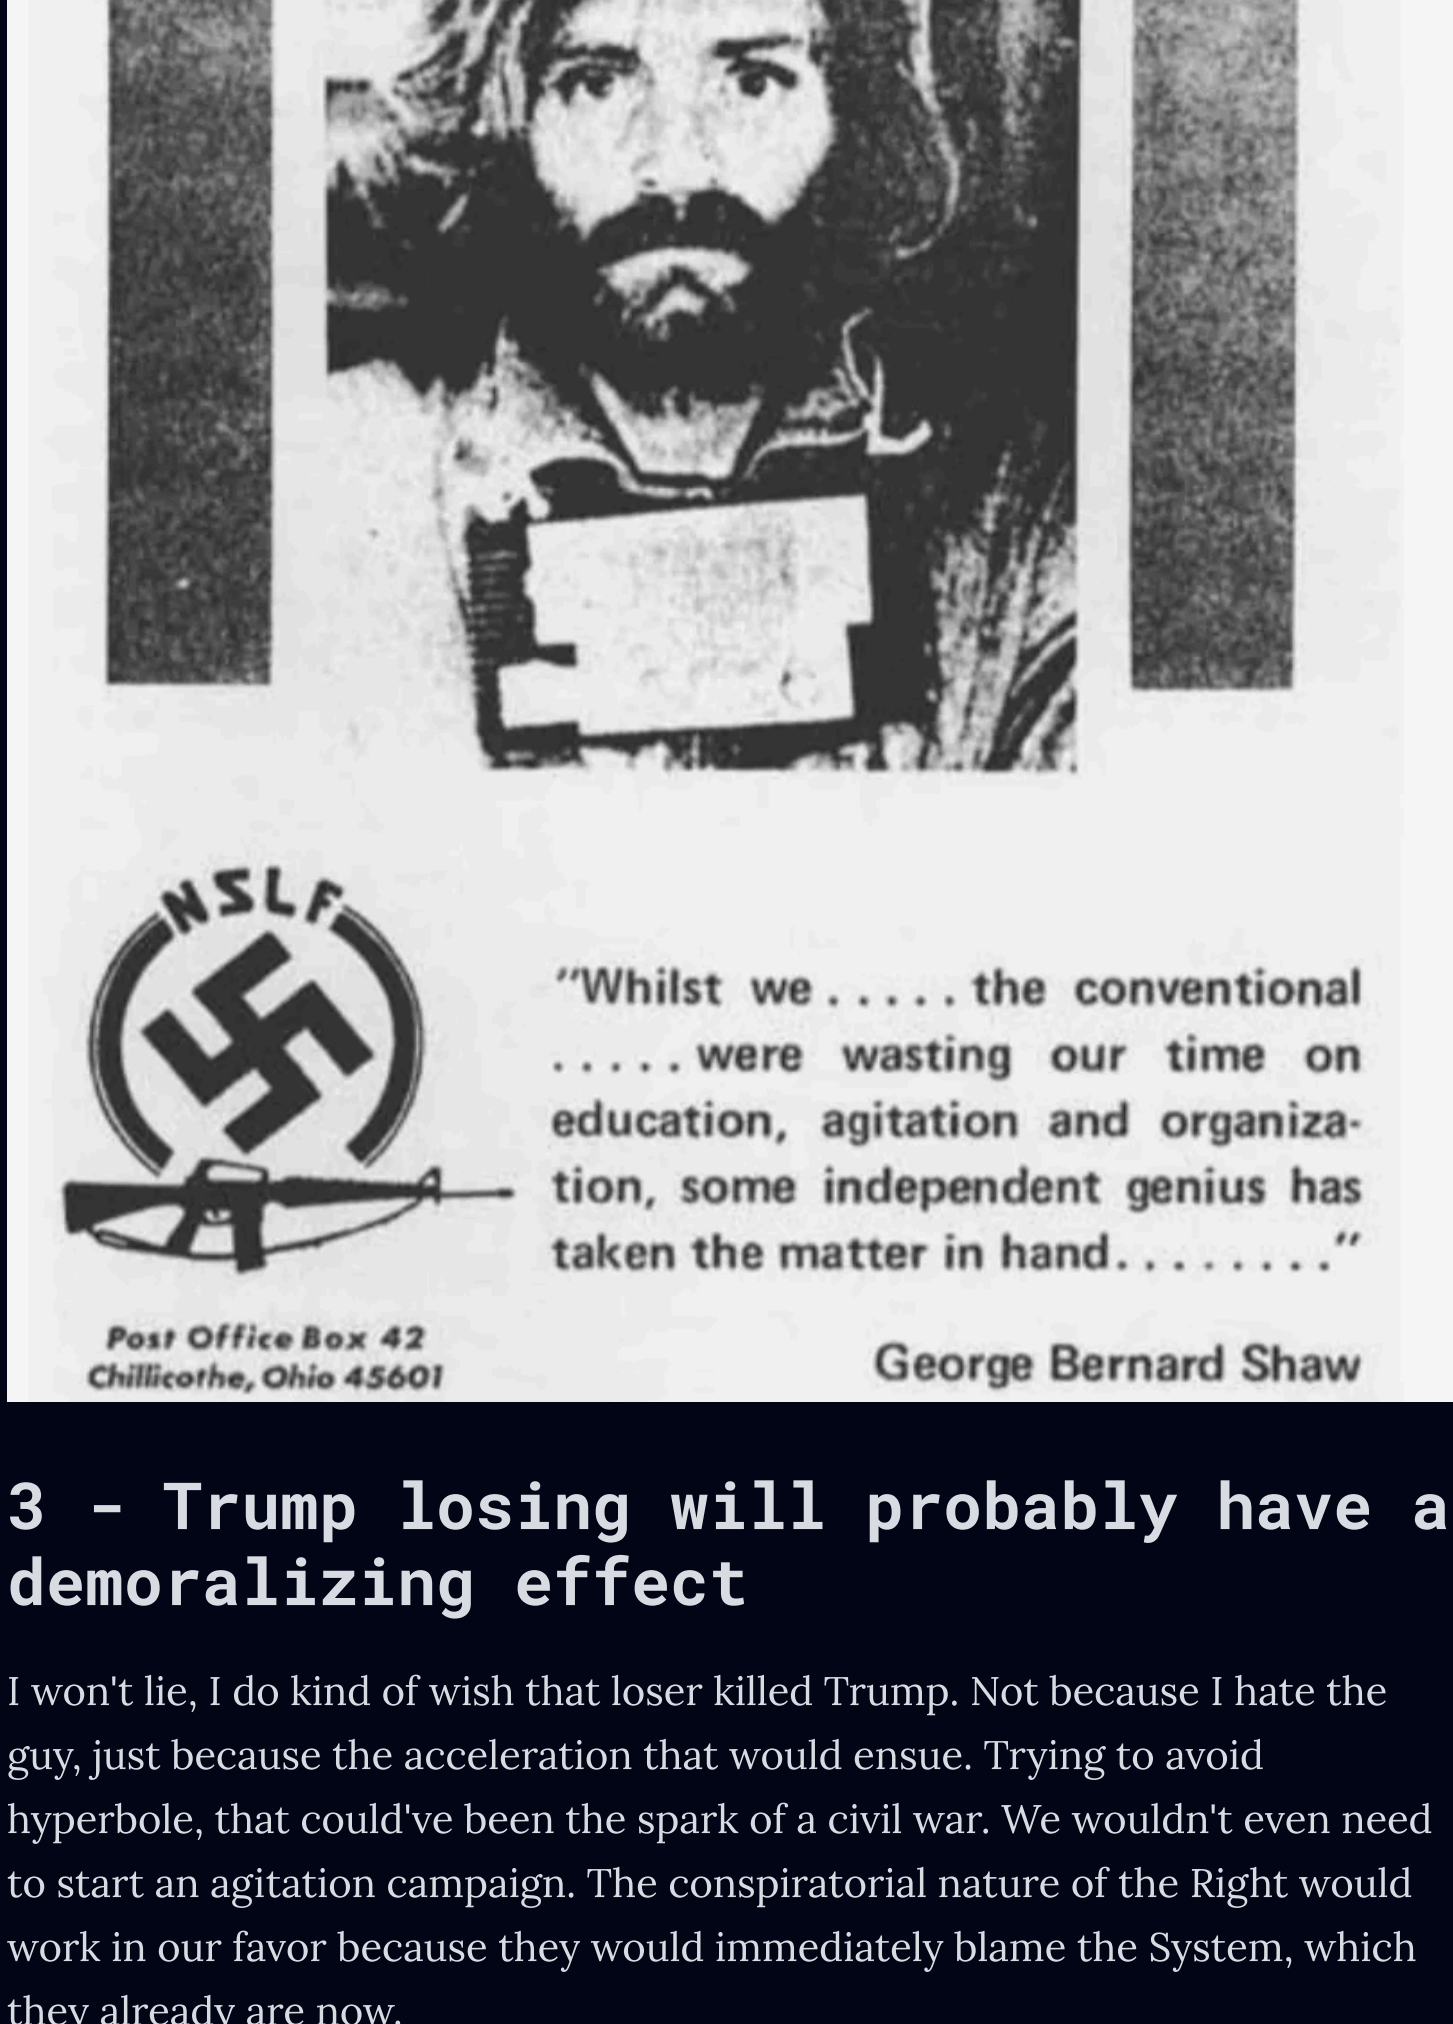

Another Trump presidency, if he lives up to what he's currently promising, would absolutely be a positive thing.

2 - Don't disregard temporal politics yet

This is the most sympathetic view for me, & the one I personally hold the most. The System is evil. The constitution won't save us (the opposite is true actually). We are under occupation by alien races & our existence is threatened. The System is inorganic & must be destroyed if we are to thrive.

That being said, we're not in a stage where we have the liberty to completely disregard the realpolitik of today. Eventually, we will be in a Turner Diaries situation where firearms are banned & the State is openly anti-White with no holds barred. But not yet. We need to at least minimize the threat of the System in the meantime. Things like cutting immigration or defunding federal law enforcement (namely the ATF & FBI) would be extremely useful for us as a whole, both now & down the line. Trying to keep firearms easily accessible is also a priority. We won't always have this opportunity, so it's best we take advantage of it now.

3 - Trump losing will probably have a demoralizing effect

I won't lie, I do kind of wish that loser killed Trump. Not because I hate the guy, just because the acceleration that would ensue. Trying to avoid hyperbole, that could've been the spark of a civil war. We wouldn't even need to start an agitation campaign. The conspiratorial nature of the Right would work in our favor because they would immediately blame the System, which they already are now.

That being said (take a shot everytime I say that phrase), there's only 2 ways Trump losing would be useful enough to outweigh the benefits of his victory. The first one obviously being his death, which would be immediately blamed on the System & lead to a mass, and militant, anti-System sentiment across even the relatively moderate Right. The second being a repeat of 2020, but with even more egregious & undeniable corruption. Both of these would lead to the same outcome, outcry against the System - which remains our most important & dangerous enemy.

A fairly narrow defeat, something that the average joe could reasonably assume to be accurate, is the worst case scenario. It would lead to all the bad things of a lefty admin (unlimited immigration & demographic warfare, plus no guns) without the benefits of acceleration. It would also probably just blackpill more people than it would radicalize. It's better Trump gets thrown in prison or dies, and becomes a martyr for the Right.

These guys were so cool. To bad they were purged from the government & replaced with people who want you dead :(

Conclusion

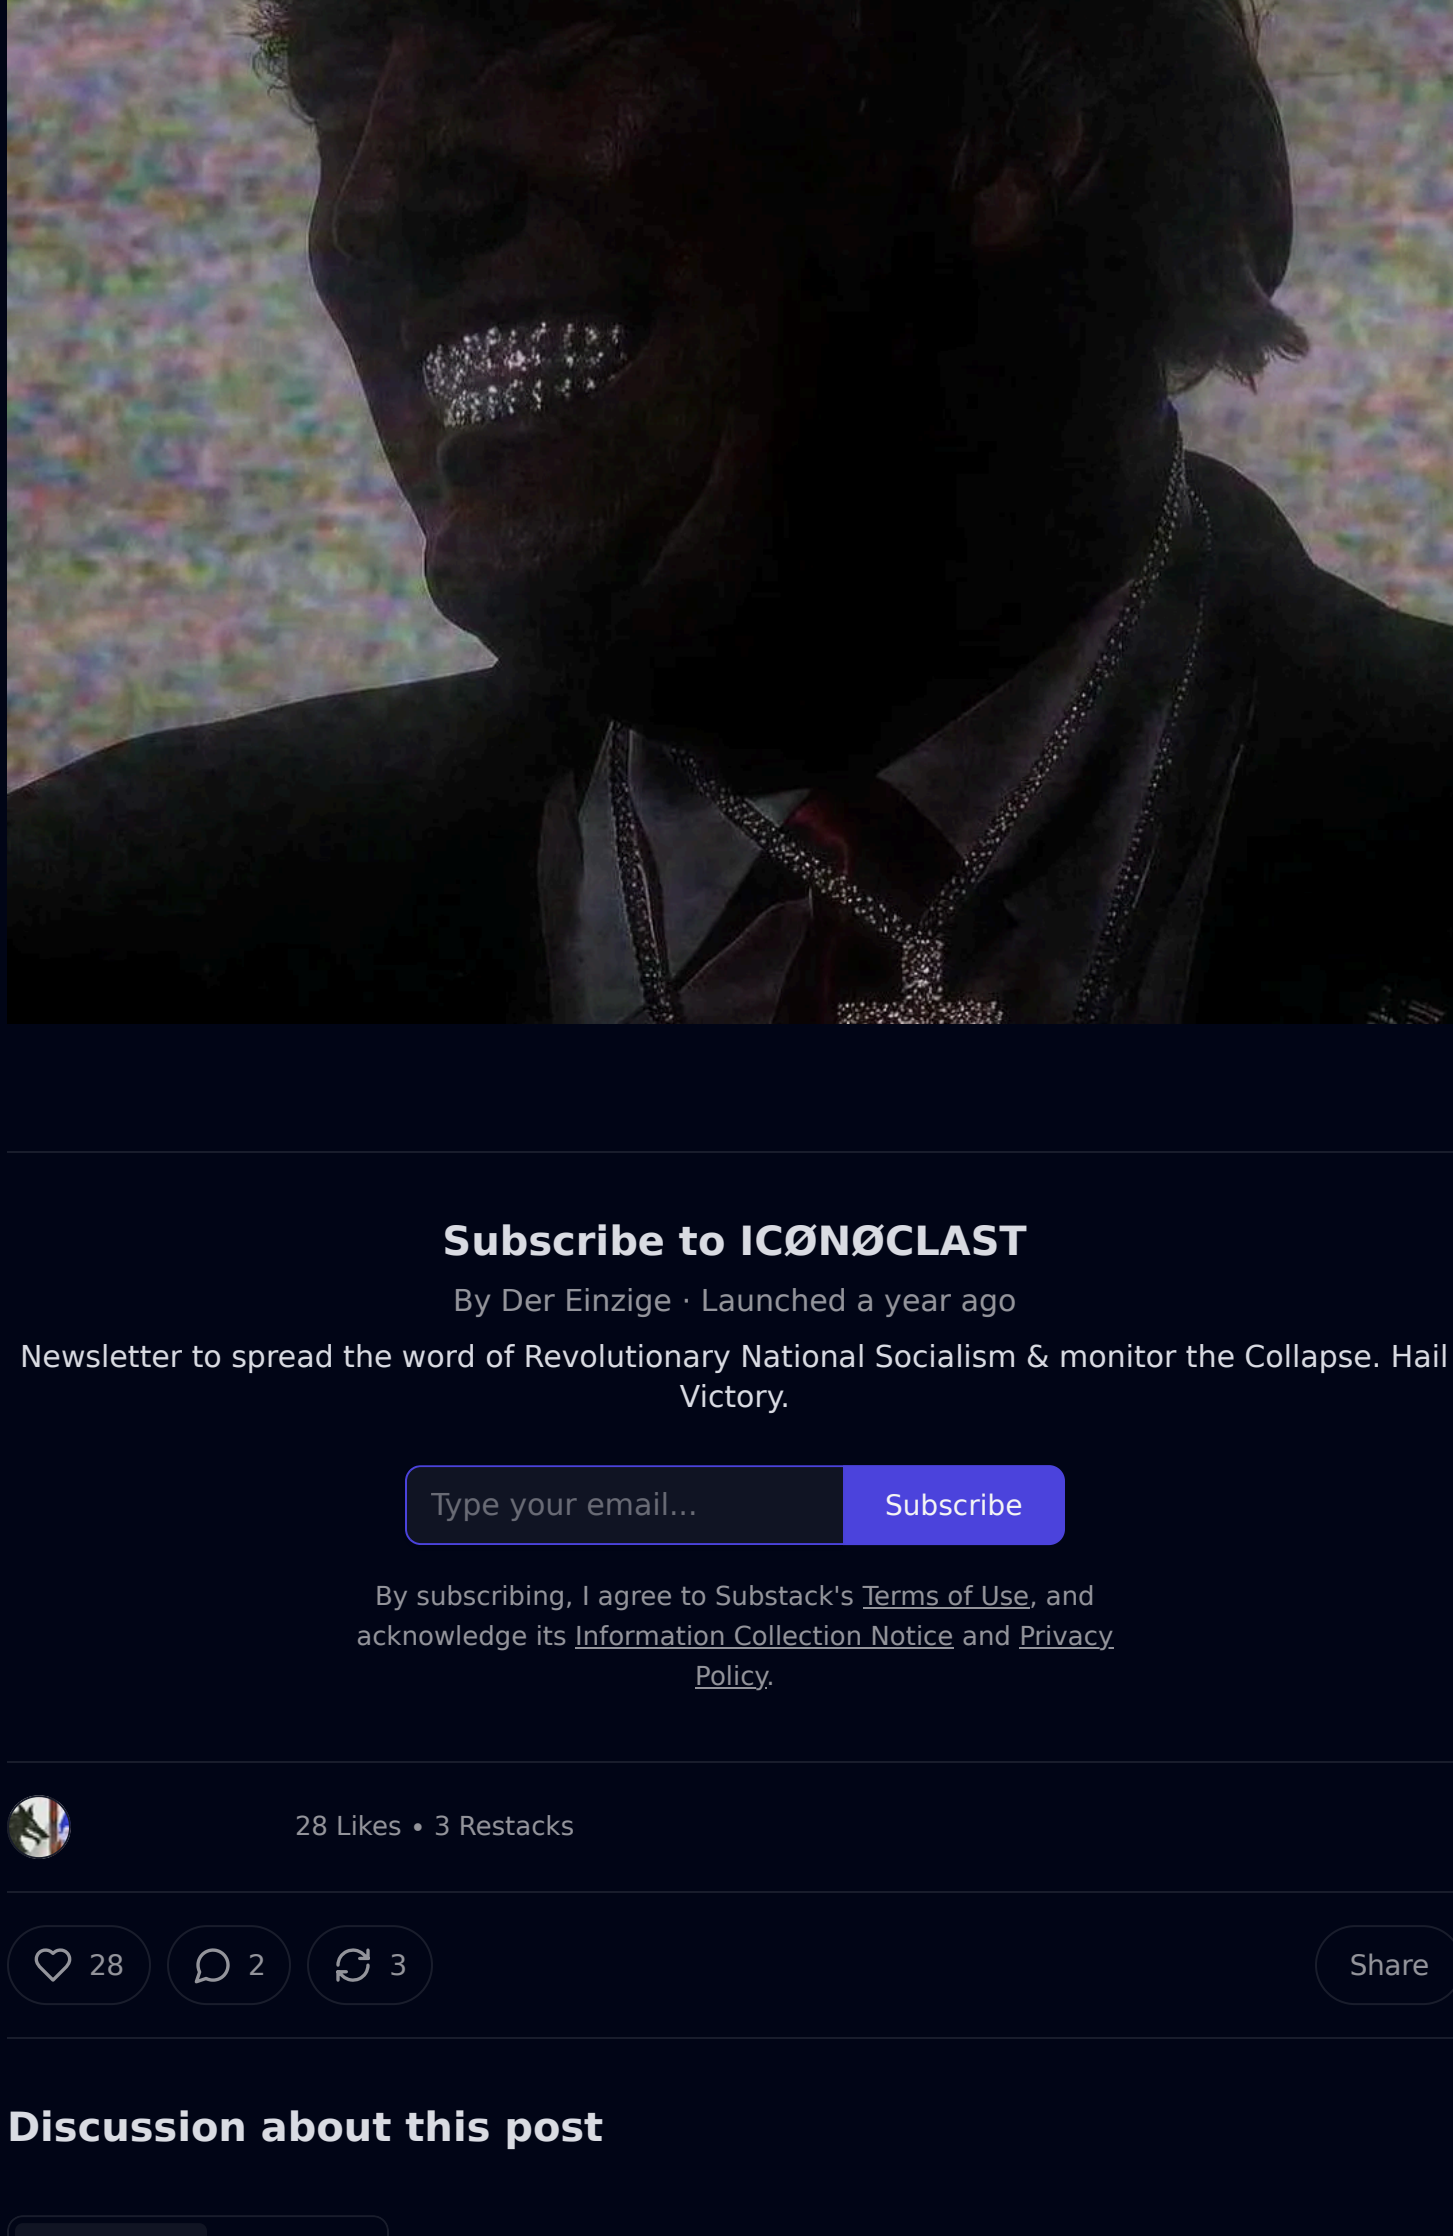

As I've said, I'm in the 2nd category but I sympathize with the 1st. I think the 3rd is misguided. I probably won't be voting because I'm already from a dark red state, plus I'll be overseas & don't feel like dealing with that process. If you're in a state that's likely to be a close call, you should probably go ahead & fill out that Trump ballot. A lot of these arguments are ultimately pointless & happening between people whose worldviews are 99% identical, it's a waste of time & energy. Honestly, this whole election will probably work in favor regardless of the outcome as the Right is finally growing some fangs & the political divide only continues to grow.

For the time being, Trump is the avatar of White America. Hopefully Whites will continue past the need for Trump & become more racially conscious, but for the time being we are confined to the realpolitik of the day.

"...the key to success in the struggle ahead is self-discipline. While it is the time to be legal we must stolidly endure whatever the State sees fit to inflict upon us. And when it is time to revolt, we must be prepared to unleash all the furies of hell on the State until it yields." - Dr. William Luther Pierce

Satya Yuga will come my friends, but there are more pressing matters for the time being. I absolutely consider myself a Romantic Idealist, but we must always keep in mind the praxis of our mission.

Neither left or right will close the borders. Therefore they're both terrible.
